owner - shop foreman - team driver

BIO:

"Like father, like son," is what 23-year old Zach Adams is hoping to accomplish.

Following in his father's footsteps, Zach is well on his way to meeting his main goal in the monster truck industry. "I want to make sure my dad's work and all the great things he's done don't stop anytime soon. I want to keep our name in the monster truck business for a long time."

A gifted welder and machinist, Zach quietly comments about his age with a wealth of natural know-how when it comes to working with metal. Both of the team's trucks, the Bar's Leaks Eliminator and the Rislone Defender, feature thousands of welds laid by his own hand. On top of that, Zach spent many of his summers during his school years travelling with his dad all over the country. "While my friends were sitting around playing video games, I was off in Montana or Pennsylvania or who knows where doing shows with dad, learning the ropes. Of course now that I'm older, all the guys we used to race with have to tell me how they remember me back when I was little and all that," says Zach with a laugh.

2009 will be Zach's first year behind the wheel of a monster truck, and he's quietly confident about how he will do. "I've rode BMX for several years now, so I'm accustomed to my body getting tossed around in wierd ways," says the younger Adams with a chuckle. "Yeah...I've wiped out a few times too. Let's hope that doesn't happen much with the new Rislone Defender truck!"

One thing is for certain: with his father's 20 years of experience in monster trucks, Zach definately has a good teacher to help him get off to a high-flying start.
